Finally Found You

By Rangerkitty

Chapter Two:

She was still trapped in the net, struggling to get free. There were the sounds of laser blasts and explosions in the backround as Tygra raced to where Melonia fought the confines of the net. When he reached her, he found that he had no knife or any other way of cutting the ropes that bound her. The net had no obvious opening or hole to help her escape through. He took a hold of two of the cords and looked though them at her lovely yet frightened face. Her eyes were deep green, her hair a dark golden color, and her cheeks were flushed a pale pink. He gripped the ropes tightly and tore at them forcefully until they ripped under his strength.

The noise of vehicles, battle and gunfire in the background ceased, and there was nothing but the light of the setting sun and a cool breeze that was scented with the smell of her hair that surrounded them now. He pulled the netting over her so that she was free, and gazed into those sea-green eyes of hers and she wrapped her arms around him.

"Are you all right, Melonia? He asked her, not yet standing up.

"I am now…" she whispered and she reached up and kissed him softly. Electricity flooded through him and he pressed down on her lips with his and tightened his embrace. He ran his hands though her soft golden hair and held her close.

Tygra's eyes fluttered open and he quickly sat up in bed. He was in the Cat's Lair, in his own room. He realized he had been dreaming, and let himself fall back down onto his pillows. "Wow…" he thought to himself. He lay there a few more moments, grinned to himself, then rose from the bed to start his day.